was agree with the remandapina Businetin that it can hardly be that our government intends retreating from the position assumed by Mr. Marcy, which was universally popular in this country, without distinction of party, and which was regarded by the most callightened portion of the English as involving out of the wiscert and greatest reforms of the age. The Morcy principle is briefly this: "We will abandon privateering if you will reduce war to a combat between men-of-war." has long been felt by the whole civilized world the the bombarding of cities, the inflicting of povert and misery on inoffensive citizens and women an children, is more devilish than human, and that make a peaceable population, merchants or others suffer in a war of which they probably did not ap prove, is iniquitous. Ta reduce warfare to the warfaring classes, is to take from it the gnerill character and reduce it to a question of strengt and skill. There is somathing peculiarly noble and humane in this idea, and it would be werse than abourd if our Government had agreed to ebolish privateering on any other terms.

We have no navy to speak of, and privateers ar er principal defence. It is a pity that we should be obliged to rely on them, but each defence is prisoners and 30 guns.

The Washington States tells us that "if in ac to the views of the remainder. my isolated cases the Democrats have been taught rame of stealing, it is quite sure Opposition as the crume of steading, it is quite cure Opposition as sociation was the sole cames of it," and that Democrate "never think of going to the Louisville Journal for instruction in the viriue of concealment."
We have our fears that in isolated exceptional cases our genial friend Heiss would take advantage of the weakness of an erring opposent; but we can readily conceive that neither be nor "any of his tribe" have occasion to come to us to learn "the Sparian virtues of caseling and concealing." The Major has whiteme turned the creak of a Locofoce, organ too casely and faithfully to require any instruction in the game of "hids and seek."
